Started in 1995, the studio focuses on images that inspire new ideas. History Colors in Motion was started as a motion graphic company in Manhattan. After establishing a solid foundation in client work, Keith Carradine (founder and president), decided to focus on creating interactive graphics and video for private commercial clients. In 2004, Colors in Motion started collaborating with visual artist Gordon Hempton and together they founded an independent art studio. Hempton served as the studio's first Director of Art and Design and Carradine was eventually promoted to the title of Chief Creative Officer. In 2011, Colors in Motion officially launched a graphic and interactive branding firm that works in the film, television and entertainment industry. The logo and website were created by GSAPP and the overall branding was done by way of a custom design and image library. The brand was formally announced in 2012 as a collection of creative companies under the leadership of Creative Services President, Danielle Soares. Soares worked closely with business development, partnerships and talent placements to develop a cohesive narrative. In 2016, Soares was promoted to the role of Art Director, overseeing the current creative direction of Colors in Motion.
