File photo of India's Agni-4 missile. Loading Agni-4 is capable of carrying a nuclear warhead of 1.5-metre diameter and weighs around 600 kilograms. It can be launched from the Satish Dhawan space centre in India's southern state of Andhra Pradesh and is capable of reaching a maximum range of around 4,500 km. It is capable of carrying a conventional payload as well. India launched its first ballistic missile, Agni-1, in 1998. Defence Minister Manohar Parrikar told reporters the missile "has been inducted at the Satish Dhawan Space Centre and is undergoing final tests." The Defence Ministry has not released any details about the payload of the ballistic missile, which would be carried only when the missile is launched. India previously launched a nearly-complete ballistic missile in a two-day test firing from the same site in September last year. Agni-4 can deliver nuclear as well as conventional warheads. The Agni-4 is the fourth variant of the Agni-series ballistic missiles. The first of the series was launched in 1999 and is capable of carrying a nuclear warhead of 2 3e33713323
