Equalizers are devices that compensate for differences in signal frequency and/or amplitude, such as frequency response and loss and gain, respectively, that may exist between the transmitted and received signals. For example, during transmission of a RF signal, the signal may be modified such that the transmitted RF signal includes some frequency response or loss that is different from the RF signal prior to modification. During reception, these frequency response and loss values may, for example, depend on the characteristics of the receiver itself. For example, receiver gain may depend on receiver electronics and/or the actual receiving element, which may be a transistor, or an antenna. Thus, an equalizer may be used to compensate for the frequency response or loss that may exist between the received and the transmitted signal.Q: Jquery hide all items that match Okay, I have no idea how to ask this question so please bear with me. Basically I need to know how to iterate through a div that contains a large list of items and hide all of them that match a particular class name (or contain a particular word) like... item one item two item three item four if a user hovers over item1 I need all the items that contain this class to hide, item2 stays visible, item three is visible, etc. I know this can't be done in a single Jquery function unless it takes some form of a loop. A: You don't want to iterate all of the elements, but only the children: $('.menu li').hover(function() { $(this).children('li').hide(); }); Here's a demo. To clear the selection before you start, use.
