Review of Game Guardian "I like my sword-swinging more than a sleeping pill." - Suk'so Overview The night had fallen. A ghostly figure dressed in black and another in white, joined by a mesmerizing sound, stepped on this wonderful world. The masked men moved carefully to avoid falling into the abyss. The protagonist, a hero clad in a red cloak, had a glittering gaze, as if he was looking at a vision. The other protagonist also had a clean, agile appearance. Meanwhile, the protagonist followed the voice of the other protagonist. The voice was hiding somewhere in this desolate place. They approached a bridge of crystal that was looking down at the vast sea of crystal. This was the first time the protagonist had seen a sky the color of a bunch of crystal. The sky reflected the stars in heaven. Meanwhile, on a sunny morning, somewhere in the Stone Kingdom, the protagonist is in a gray and cold country. They have been given a quest. As for their destination, it was the Evil Lands. The duo are in the invitation-only world where only the bravest adventurers are allowed. The protagonist takes the quest because "I like my sword-swinging more than a sleeping pill." Screening of rubber latex as a bioavailable source of thiacalix[4]arenes. The dicarboxylic component of the two thiacalix[4]arenes isolated from a rubber latex (ca. 0.1 mg l⁻¹) was titrated with guanidinium chloride (GdnHCl) and monitored by UV spectroscopy. A noticeable shift to higher wavelengths of the absorption maximum when tested as a GdnHCl-ligand occurred (from 530 to 570 nm). This observation indicated an increased rigidity of the macrocyclic skeleton that suggests an interaction with the
