1. Technical Field This invention relates generally to conveyor vacuum devices and more particularly to vacuum panels which offer protection from such products as animal fodder, bio-fuel, paper pulp, seeds, nuts, grains, drugs, explosives, fertilizers, foodstuffs, chemicals, and other potentially dangerous goods. 2. Discussion The vast majority of vacuum panels, which are used today, are constructed of polyethylene and have numerous burrows or holes which are placed in a single plane. An alternate construction for a vacuum panel would be to create a vacuum panel with a honeycomb planar array wherein the honeycomb planar array comprises individual honeycomb cells wherein each honeycomb cell is an elongated tube-like structure as shown by a comparative example in FIGS. 1-6. Vacuum panels are typically used as an accessory to a conveyor or to a flat bed conveyor to transport articles, such as the product materials listed above, from one location to another. Vacuum panels are usually incorporated either underneath the conveyor or, alternatively, incorporated on top of the conveyor in the case of a belt conveyor. When vacuum panels are used on top of the conveyor, the panels are usually installed about the width of the bed and spaced from the conveyor's belt to reduce the probability of contamination of the conveyor's belt which may ultimately be carried by the conveyor to product distribution areas. A major problem with conventional vacuum panels and honeycomb vacuum panels is that they can easily be mis-positioned or distorted into a non-planar configuration. When this happens, it is possible for the air through these mis-positioned or distorted vacuum panels to leak towards the conveyor's main air source since the velocity of air flow through these panels is reduced by the distortion. When this happens, a reduction in the level of vacuum occurs leading to a reduced amount of air flow from the air source to the vacuum panels. When

The effect of red wine intake on platelet activation after cranial irradiation was studied in a prospective randomized trial with patients receiving a single dose of 15 Gy to the head and neck. Washed platelets were isolated from 17 healthy non-drinking volunteers. Patients were randomized to one of three groups with drinks containing red wine (A), white wine (B) or water (C). A venipuncture sample was obtained at baseline, 1-2 and 24 h after irradiation. Platelet activation was assessed by quantification of the initial serotonin (5HT) release and the thromboxane-mimetic-induced prostaglandin-E2 production. Healthy volunteers had an individual spontaneous release of 5-HT which ranged from 50 to 200 pmol/10(10) platelets. After irradiation, a marked increase in platelet activation was observed in all subjects at all time points. In group A, a significant enhancement of the 5HT release was seen at 1-2 h after irradiation in comparison with the baseline values (p = 0.028). In group B, a similar effect was noted 1-2 h after irradiation (p = 0.001), however, with no significant
