The Department of Justice believes Attorney General Jeff Sessions “did not lie” when he told Congress he had no knowledge of a federal investigation into the 2016 Trump campaign’s ties to Russia, the agency’s spokesman said Thursday.

“In response to media inquiries on Wednesday, March 7, 2018, Department of Justice spokesman Ian Prior told a group of reporters that ‘there was nothing misleading about his testimony,’” the Wall Street Journal reported. But on Wednesday, shortly before the deadline for the federal government to release documents sought by the House Intelligence Committee as part of its investigation into the Trump campaign’s Russia ties, Mr. Sessions testified that he had not learned of any such probe until the press reports of its existence last month. “I have been interviewed extensively by the special counsel, both in person and via telephone. I have answered all of the questions asked of me and I will continue to do so,” Mr. Sessions said in prepared remarks for a speech to the Conservative

Political Action Conference. However, since that statement was released, newly released transcripts show he was interviewed for three hours by the special counsel, Robert S. Mueller III. Mr. Mueller is also investigating whether Mr. Trump obstructed justice in a number of ways after the president fired former FBI director James B. Comey in May 2017. The House Intelligence Committee has also asked the acting FBI director, Andrew G. McCabe, to appear next week before the committee. Mr. McCabe's appearance will be his first since being named acting director in late January, shortly after Mr. Trump fired his predecessor. Democrats on the House

This invention relates generally to the field of medical implants and specifically to the field of coronary artery stenting. Coronary artery disease is the leading cause of death in the United States. The coronary arteries that supply blood and oxygen to the heart muscle are composed of one or two layers of cells that may become diseased or damaged. The arteries are frequently blocked by atherosclerotic plaque, which is a buildup of cholesterol, fatty substances, calcium and other substances. When the coronary arteries become blocked, a substantial portion of the heart muscle is deprived of blood. To treat a blocked artery, several options are open to a physician. A physician can perform a bypass surgery where a segment of healthy blood vessel is surgically implanted in the patient''''
