Although it can be said that the lives of our people have been consistently going on, recently there have been a lot of dangers. An ancient people who have never given in to a change, and their technique of living has not changed for generations have begun to disappear. Their idea of the living has changed with each passing day, and the people who have had been existing for generations have begun to disappear. An age that has no name has begun to spread all around. And such a world is one without hope. And yet, even so, our people still exist, and the wind of hope and dreams is blowing from their heart. When the people who have been existing for generations begin to disappear, what will become of the people who continue to live in the future? An unforgettable smile of courage, and the night is not even close to being over. "Come to Me, Father." "What is the matter?" The voice that called out from behind you, the scene of the night had become blurry, and you see the face of the ancient man who was looking at the moon. VINCENT: Yea, I know of what you speak. Yet, time grows short. All is that which has come before, cannot come again. I will undertake to the very last to make you smile... to the very last. After all of that, I will tell you a tale. I know of what you speak, but I cannot begin to tell you of how this time is yet again different. For the tale itself is that which comes to completion. To those who seek happiness, this tale tells how such an unhappiness will make their days of vengeance glad... to a certain degree. Yet, there is more to the tale. For those who seek eternity... instead there is an eternity in the past. For those who seek only absolution, there is a common enemy. For those who know that a darkness still lingers, they will know. For those whose hearts to be won, the very flower of this tale is for each to know their love. Within that knowledge lies the gift of knowing if there is hope... or if there is no hope. And it is for that which is and all of the absent answers; and to that end, the tale will end. For that which has been has already been. I ask only that you listen for the answer. I will tell you a tale. INT.
