The most beautiful and best farm animals ever. These guys love to suck on the neck of their master, and you will be able to see that they just wait for the opportunity to be able to do that. Well, you might have to go to a zoo or to a farm where a farm animal or an animal are in the same cage, and then fuck the animal directly. As it may seem a bit unusual, but it is a reality that not only men are doing that. Click here to read more.. Animal porn; Bestiality 1;...Q: How to avoid C++11 implicit casting and double-checked locking? I'm trying to avoid using the new C++11 move constructors to store some pointers around in my class. I have this base class: class base_class{ public: base_class(const string& s) : _s(s) { } protected: string _s; }; And I wish to define several derived classes that wrap a base class pointer with some other types. For example: class a: public base_class{ public: a(const string& s) : base_class(s) { } a(string s) : base_class("") { } }; class b: public base_class{ public: b(const string& s) : base_class(s) { } b(string s) : base_class("") { } }; But using the cast: a* a_pointer = new a(s); b* b_pointer = new b(s); Is there a better way to keep track of the class type without using the C++11 move constructors? Ideally, for b, I'd be able to do the following: b* b_pointer = new b(s); And my a and b classes would be able to access the "real" base class object correctly. A: Use std::unique_ptr from the d0c515b9f4
