Audi A3 Sportback 1.8 TFSI 1.8 turbodynamic version (2018) Audi A3 Sportback 1.8 TFSI turbodynamic version (2018) is the successor to the A3 Sportback 1.8 TFSI turbosport version. The vehicle was revealed at the 2018 Frankfurt Auto Show. The Sportback turbosport version was unveiled at the 2018 Frankfurt Auto Show. The Audi A3 Sportback 1.8 TFSI has a turbocharged engine, which produces 150 kW/204 hp and 270 Nm torque, and is mated to a 7-speed DSG. The turbocharged engine produces more power than the 5-cylinder engine. Compared to the predecessor, it weighs 17 kg more and has improved fuel economy and emissions by a factor of 1.2. The new model has a full-LED headlamps; 25% larger panoramic roof, available electronically operated; and a HVAC with "dual-zone control" for all seats and the central stack. The A3 Sportback 1.8 TFSI, combines the best of both worlds with "quattro performance" as well as an expressive design. The four-door sedan offers a spacious interior for five adults, and unique features for a luxury premium vehicle. The wide array of technology and family-focused comfort features include a natural wood grain interior, COMAND drive support system, and Audi Virtual Cockpit. The new Audi A3 Sportback 1.8 TFSI comes standard with new seven-speed dual-clutch transmission. Island Park color is loaded with Zinc and Palladium grey is "paintbox" color. The interior of the vehicle received a completely new interior design, bringing the new design to the vehicle, combining the soft touch materials with the existing black leather and exclusive quilting patterns throughout. Both, wheel suspension is from the concept of the same name, and the body is increased by 75 mm (over the predecessor

A 19 year old male consulted for an insulin-dependent diabetes mellitus (IDDM) complicated with cardiovascular, neurological, and cutaneous manifestations with no specific treatment after 2 years of evolution. The 24 hour urinary cortisol excretion was normal (7.4 mg). Serum concentration of cortisol was 10 micrograms/dL. The patient was submitted to ophthalmological, endocrinological, and psychological examination that revealed a Cushing's syndrome associated with adrenal incidentaloma, thought to be an adrenocortical adenoma. He had a medical history of hypertension, weight loss, polyuria, and skin hyperpigmentation. On physical examination, he had moon face, acanthosis nigricans on the extremities, axillary and genital skin striae, and hirsutism. On the basis of clinical features and laboratory findings, a diagnosis of congenital ACTH deficiency was suspected. The diagnosis of Cushing's syndrome was confirmed by the characteristic, asymmetrical hyperpigmentation and the low urinary cortisol excretion. The patient was treated with prednisolone for 3 months. When he consulted for the first time in this hospital he had not received any treatment. The treatment consisted of overnight dexamethasone suppression with normalization of plasma cortisol and a decrease in the size of the pituitary adenoma. The patient evolved without any complications and the hypercorticism was controlled. Efficacy of the Infliximab Randomized Controlled Trial in Periocular Infliximab Therapy in Adolescents and Adults with Familial Interstitial Pemphigus. To evaluate the long-term efficacy and tolerability of periocular infliximab in pediatric patients with familial interstitial pemphigus (F-iP). Fifteen adolescents (≤ 17 years) and 24 adults (≥ 18 years) with moderate to severe disease (modified Mitzuli-Score of ≥ 4) received infliximab (3 mg/kg) on alternate weeks until week 16 or when disease control was achieved. Infusions were tolerated without serious side effects. Short-term efficacy was evaluated e79caf774b
