“HyperMotion Technology is an exciting new feature that makes a huge step forward in understanding football and has been developed over time using very different sources of data and methods,” explained Technical Lead David Rutter. “The core focus of developing HyperMotion Technology was to create a real game-changing feature that provides a realistic and authentic football match experience. The data required to achieve this has been derived from a wide range of sources, so it is a technical challenge for our team to work out how to use it most effectively.” In FIFA 20, players could take on virtual opponents. This feature will be further improved in Fifa 22 Product Key. Just as in a real match, new teammates will be created by sharing their data in-game. This includes the same animations, fingerprints, markers and more – all of which can be then be controlled and viewed in the FIFA Ultimate Team App. As was the case in FIFA 20, players can customize their FIFA Ultimate Team with player ratings, kits, stadiums, and player cards. Players can also create their own content on the web, such as transfers, kits and training sessions. FIFA 22 will also feature the introduction of FIFA Ultimate Team Seasons, which will enable players to play through a full season of FIFA Ultimate Team Seasons. Last year’s FIFA 19 introduced the new FIFA 19 Seasons experience. FIFA 22’s New EA SPORTS Football League will allow players to play through all 30 of this year’s FUT Leagues, starting with the FUT Gameweek 1. Players can then play on the next six months, which will enable them to play through all of the FUT Leagues. Playable European Leagues Germany, Italy and Spain will feature in EA SPORTS Football League, as well as the FUT League Weekly Kit updates. The next five updates will be brought to the live game before each FUT League concludes. “Our game-play engine is smarter than ever,” said Jay Isidore, FIFA Lead Producer. “FIFA 22 will not only introduce HyperMotion Technology, but the introduction of new teams and leagues. This is something that our player community really wanted, and it’s something we have been working on for over the past year.” Off the ball Recognizing players’ preferred paths off the ball can help them in more than one way.
