Tomorrowland, Subtitled A World Beyond[1] is a 2015 American science fiction film based on Walt Disney's E ticket attraction of the same name. A successful virtual-reality simulation of the titular utopian city is shut down prematurely in the aftermath of a terrorist attack and its inventor is accused of being responsible. The father of a child who was killed in the attack hires a conman, who poses as a member of the city's "Tomorrowland" planning committee, to get inside the system and investigate his family's case. Impressed by his son's visionary proposal to "fix" the system, a wealthy entrepreneur proposes to take the project to the next level, offering to finance a substantial budget for further research and development. But when extreme weather and strange disappearances begin occurring in the park, its creator becomes concerned that his creation has lost its ability to predict the future.
