was to start with a data library. that way he could know what was in the environment, what it was made of, and whether it was already there or not. he also knew that the bones of a bonecrunching dinosaur would have been covered with very hard, resistant tissue, like the hard outer shell of an egg. the idea of an eggshell being a natural, porous diffusion barrier came to mind. he realized that when he cracked the eggshell, water would start flowing in and out of the egg. he would ask himself, would this be similar to how a cell membrane protected its contents from the environment? if it was, then the membrane would be a wonderful barrier to study. he wanted to know if dinosaurs were made from a bone-like substance as well, and if so, would these bones work as natural barriers to water?. he began to research these questions and found a lot of information about bones. he then decided to start with a subject that was safe and involved no dangerous chemicals. he chose plastic. he knew that if plastic was durable enough, it should be easy to get samples from old bottles and other items. then he could crack open the plastic to see what was inside. he started with a few samples and sent them to a laboratory

for analysis. he waited for the results. they came back and told him that he had a million dollars worth of plastic in the sample. he was excited to crack open the plastic and look inside. he pulled out a couple of pieces of plastic and held them up to the light. the sample of plastic was a perfect, strong, transparent, clear block of plastic. the more he looked at it, the more he understood how plastic is made. he knew that he could crack open a lot of plastics from old bottles and other plastic items in his store. he wanted to learn about the processes of making plastics, so he went back to the lab. he asked them to show him the exact chemical process that makes plastic. he started with a sample of melted plastic and watched it as it was being made. he finally cracked the plastic and watched it crystallize. 5ec8ef588b
