Some of the most popular are layers, brushes, filters, masks, gradients, shape tools, type tools, and even the infamous Camera Raw. Now the difference between Adobe Lightroom and Adobe Photoshop is pretty clear. Lightroom is designed for semi-professional photographers. With this you have a photo browser, a way to adjust photos, and some extra tools. It's different than Photoshop because it's designed for you to do 'editing' to your photos. Photoshop is for the more advanced. This type of editing is primarily done in Photoshop. This type of 'editing' includes text editing, photo retouching, and creating a special order or special effects canvas that you can use in Photoshop. I know that sounds like a lot of work, but if you really want to understand what Photoshop is, you don't have to do it with a combination of both. With Photoshop, you can upload pictures to Lightroom first and then import and edit them in Photoshop. After that, you export them back to Lightroom. The most interesting feature of the Photoshop layers is the layer mask. To add a layer mask, right-click on the layer name and select Layer Mask. You can also use the Layer Mask button on the toolbar to add a layer mask. If, however, you don't see the Layer Mask button on the toolbar, then simply press the Ctrl/Cmd-T on a Mac or click on the Layer Mask button in the Layers panel. To make a selection inside a layer mask, you need to know the layer's name and where exactly you want to make the selection. If you are at the beginning of the selection, CTRL/Cmd-click over the surface of the layer mask to add a mask to the layer. If you are at the end of the selection, you need to pixelate the mask by pressing the Delete key. If you are somewhere in the middle, then you need to select the top layer by Ctrl/Cmd-clicking on the top layer and then select the layer beneath it by Ctrl/Cmd-clicking on the layer.
