on your.The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers said Monday that part of the Mississippi River is flowing

"at record low levels" — a problem that could worsen during record-setting heat ahead of the July 4 holiday. "This is a river that is historic for its record flow, its record low is always significant," said

Army Corps spokesman Mark Steele. He said that local agencies are already reporting low river levels in St. Louis and St. Paul, Minnesota. But any river running lower than 1,200 cubic feet per second — or cfs — is considered dangerously low. The Mississippi is expected to be at or near 1,200 cfs early this week, Steele said. U.S. Coast Guard data show the Mississippi at or near 1,200 cfs since March 10. The river was just below 1,200 cfs on June 19 and 20. Steele said the Corps will begin releasing water from the massive Spencer Dam on the Mississippi's Missouri River to raise the St. Louis area's main reservoir and restore lower river flows. The move to raise the main reservoir is expected to be completed 79a2804d6b
