I think people should know about the, and. Pharmacokinetic and safety evaluation of once-daily gemcitabine in Japanese patients with pancreatic or biliary tract cancer. This study investigated the pharmacokinetic and safety profile of gemcitabine in Japanese patients with pancreatic or biliary tract cancers in order to evaluate the potential for dose adjustment of gemcitabine. The pharmacokinetics of gemcitabine were studied in 18 Japanese patients with unresectable pancreatic or biliary tract cancer who were scheduled to receive weekly intravenous infusion of gemcitabine for 2 or 3 weeks. The single dose of gemcitabine on day 8 was 320 mg/m² by 30-minute intravenous infusion. Patients were followed for safety every 2 weeks during the treatment period. The mean area under the concentration-time curve (AUC) from 0 to infinity (AUC(0-infinity)) and clearance (CL) of gemcitabine were 906.7 microg x hr/L and 230.8 L/hr, respectively. The mean apparent terminal half-life (t(1/2)) was 14.3 hr. The mean CL/dose of gemcitabine was 69.5 mL/hr/m², which is relatively lower than that of patients of European or American descent. One patient developed grade 3 thrombocytopenia, one had grade 3 decreased platelets, and seven had a mild to moderate rise in the level of total bilirubin during the study. In conclusion, gemcitabine clearance in Japanese patients was approximately 65% of the value reported in Western patients, and the C(max) of gemcitabine was significantly higher than that of Western patients. No significant differences were observed between Japanese and European patients in the pharmacokinetics of gemcitabine.
