The USA is one of the worlds leading producers and consumers of technology. America is also home to an abundance of computer savvy students, who, like myself, are forced to access the Internet for school purposes. It is imperative that these students, also known as High Schoolers, are educated about the repercussions of conducting themselves on the Internet. The internet is a place where people have the ability to express their thoughts and opinions freely. It is also a place where slander and libel are commonplace. These sites are all about trying to gain as many views as possible, which is the surefire way to spread information to many people. Although not every action on the Internet is bad, there are many things to be mindful of. The purpose of this website is to inform High Schoolers of their responsibilities when using the internet. In this Digital Age, the internet is a necessity. Like all other resources, you must make sure you do not abuse it. Remember, internet is a virtual playground, where people can say almost anything without repercussion. 13. When giving online presentations, your audience will be expecting to be presented with new and relevant information. This is how you can maximize the value of the presentation and keep the audience interested. Get them to say and keep repeating, “Yes, you’ve told us before”. They will remember you better if you make it clear to the audience that they’ve heard this before. Less is more. This is a simple and effective method of keeping your audience from getting bored. Don’t be too lengthy. Too much writing is not going to be beneficial. Keep it clear and simple, use bullet points. Keep to the essential points only. You’re only going to have your audience’s time for a brief moment, so make sure it’s worth it. Stay on point. Your audience may be listening to you as you speak and they're going to be more than willing to be entertained. You are giving your presentation in order to entertain them. So don't make them bored by being too abstract or too personal. Stick to the main points, the facts, and stay on target. End your presentations on a high note. Your audience will appreciate it, as it will be very easy for them to remember you. It's always recommended to go out with a bang or go out with a whimper. Ending your presentation with a bang is a way of ensuring that your audience will remember you.
