In the end, everything seems to be fine. I'm glad I changed my email. But the thing that worries me the most is that if the hackers had gotten into my mail server, I would have been able to monitor all the mail they sent and receive, and even have read their reply. Hackers May Have Opened Up My Accounts On My Other Email Services There are two possibilities in this situation. Either they got into my other email service provider and hacked it, or they hacked my email service provider and were able to access my accounts from that service. In the former situation, I'm not sure if my other email service provider would be willing to give my personal information to anyone. I mean, if they did get my personal information, they would be in violation of the NDA that I agreed to when I first registered, and also, the stuff that was in my profile is personal information. They may not want to share it with anyone. On the other hand, if they hacked my email service provider, my email accounts would be subject to their hacking. That's just common sense. You don't want someone to hack your personal email accounts. In my case, I have accounts on most email services. I'm working on finding the ones that they had access to. What I Do Now: I am currently working on cleaning my accounts on all the email services that I have. I'm not 100% sure if this will work or not, but it's my last option. I'm not sure if they can access my accounts from the other email service providers. If they did, I'm sure that my other email service providers won't be willing to give out the information.
