A CAM (Computer Aided Manufacturing) system is a machine tool which is guided by a digital model. An CAD is a model generated by a computer-aided design (CAD) system. CAM software is specialized software that allows a user to produce machined parts by taking information from a CAD or blueprint and entering this information into a specific machine tool's controller. CAM software is commonly used to manufacture metal parts and is especially common in the United States, Japan, Germany, and France. Currently, CAM software is used to make tools, dies, and various other metal parts.

Computer-aided machining (CAM) is the use of a computer to provide automatic programming of machining operations. CAM is a form of numerically controlled (NC) machining. To make a part, the user clicks and clicks and thus the cutting contour is matched to a desired shape.
